

The Changing of the Seasons

In winter there is slight enjoyment
In living west of my employment
To face the sun both to and from
Is best described as sheer annoyance.

Come spring, though, my reward's apparent
For then my roving eye, and errant,
Views female form both night and morn
Through summer garmentry transparent.